FUNERAL OF THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE MARTIN B. MADDEN

At 12.15 the Vice President and Members of the Senate entered the Chamber and occupied the seats assigned to them, the Vice President occupying a seat at the Speaker's table.

Then came members of the diplomatic corps, the Chief of Staff of the United States Army, the Chief of Naval Operations United States Navy, the Commandant of the Marine Corps, the Chief Justice and Justices of the Supreme Court, and the President of the United States with members of his Cabinet.

The body of the late Mr. MADDEN lay in state in the space in front of the Clerk's desk.

The male quartet of the Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church sang the hymn, "Some Blessed Day."

The Chaplain of the House offered the following prayer:

"There shall be no night there"—weird loneliness and awful silence are broken as our hearts move on through the stillness at the bidding of the voice divine. "O grave where is thy victory?" Through its gloom and anguish our faith arises and we feel ourselves immortal. O God we thank Thee for this great soul who has fallen amid his earthly labor and glory. How great are Thy mysteries and how inscrutable are Thy ways, yet Thy voice is heard. It is heard in solemn warning; it is heard in sweet encouragement to virtue; it is heard in the monitions of conscience and in the aspirations of our better natures. In all these ways Thou dost come to us with the sacred message of wisdom and love. He has left us blessed memory: His heights of thought were the hilltops of the common heart. His broad philanthropy reached over all classes with revealing benediction. His loftiness of patriotism fell upon the ears of the reluctant and stupid and summoned them to higher plane. His great nature touched poverty, toil, wealth, and station and took away their curse. We praise Thee for this statesman whose conscience was ever the pilot of his reason. Heavenly Father of love and mercy, no one but Thou canst know the pain that weighs upon her, as wife and mother, she conceals the grief in her pure, holy breast. His common lot, sorrows and joys she shared and blest him with the ascending power of angelic devotion. God bestow great comfort upon her and all members of the hearthstone. Help us all to rise above tempest and storm into the upper air of spiritual outlook, where there are palaces not made with hands and crowns of glory that never fade away. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord, Amen.

The Chaplain of the House read the burial office.

The male quartet sang the hymn, "Nearer My God, to Thee."

The SPEAKER. Eulogies will be pronounced by the Vice President of the United States and by Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, the ranking minority member of the committee of which Mr. MADDEN was chairman.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We stand at the bier of one whose life has been chiefly devoted to public service. In the minds of all—rising even above the grief at the loss of a dear friend and associate—is the continuing thought of the greatness of that service and the self-sacrifice it entailed.

The life of our friend from his early days in poverty to the day of his death has been one of unremitting toil. No sooner had his industry and ability relieved him, in his earlier days, of the necessity of manual work than he turned with indefatigable industry to public service, for his city and State at first, and then for our Government. His life is the familiar American epic of the rise from humble and hard circumstances to the heights of power in our great Republic. But upon this solemn occasion we who have been his associates and know his work and its burdens, borne in their full measure at all times, especially during the last few years, when at one elbow sat public responsibility and at the other expected death, may draw from his life the lesson of true statesmanship.

In such an hour as this our inner minds form that last final judgment of the life, character, and accomplishments of a dead friend. It is probably the only entirely impartial judgment which we have ever passed upon him. We do not always give verbal expression of it, for, as the Romans say, such always must be good. But, as each one of us knows, the judgment of a life in retrospect is that which endures. "A tree is best measured when it is down."

The rise of a man to a position of power and continued usefulness in Congress is never an accident. For the making of a real career Congress is useful only to the man who is useful to Congress. Here the great law of compensation is always at work—swift and inexorable.

To him who does not recognize that true progress in life, under any condition, is inseparably associated with self-denial, Congress offers the temptation of quick notoriety at its heavy cost in loss of public respect.

The pitfalls in Congress are many for him who follows the easy quest of notoriety which, when not based upon accomplishment, is worth nothing. He who enters Congress primarily to work for a career is embarked upon a doubtful venture. Work is not an incident of a career, but a career is the incident of real work. This truth is evidenced by the life of our friend.

Mr. MADDEN was a man whose career of enduring public usefulness in these bodies was based upon toil, during a long period in which he remained in comparative obscurity. This was when he was acquainting himself with the actual business of Government which he proposed to know as he knew his own business.

When one has courage along with industry to inform himself, no mere eloquence in opposition can detract attention from his utterances or lessen their great influence. When MARTIN B. MADDEN rose in his seat to speak upon any question involving the greater business policies of the American Government he spent no time in decorating fact with rhetoric or digressive oratory, and yet no man in either House commanded to a greater degree the attention of his colleagues or the country at large.

We now remember the cry of the hostile crowd in the past withstood in the public interest, not as a political factor affecting political decisions, but only as that which demonstrates the possession of courage, strength, and character, devoted to the permanent public benefit, in him who has died.

We now see that after all the highest decoration one can carry to his grave is that of general public respect—that in the long run this comes only to the statesman who, standing for the ultimate public interest at political risk, is willing at times to defy the clamor of uninformed majorities until through facts and reason he wins them to his position.

We now realize that in the quiet of the night and in his committee room, and outside of office hours, the unremitting labor of this devoted public servant finally brings to him an inarticulate judgment shared by all—"Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

He died as he would have died and as we would have had him die—still at work, despite the feebleness of his advanced years and illness, at his desk in the Capitol and in the arms of a comrade in work. He died with the harness of battle upon him.

He died in the fullness of his moral strength and influence, with his mind, as always, upon the never-ending tasks before him and duty to be done. He died in the consciousness that the results of his constructive work are felt in a better government and in a happier life of our people.

Mr. BYRNS. It is difficult for me to suitably express myself on this sad occasion. MARTIN MADDEN was my friend. I loved him deeply. As I stand here to-day I am conscious of
